Greetings Musicians

The Summer of 2014 was a little topsy-turvy, due the replacement of the fire suppression system stirring up dust, but it’s all over and things are back to normal. Best of all, a new fiscal year has begun, so feel free to send suggestions for books, scores, CDs, or DVDs to me at ALEdmonds@bsu.edu. I will also be happy to meet with your studio or class for specialized library instruction.

— Amy Edmonds

New Subject Guides

There are new subject guides for Music Business and Music Therapy. Each has links to library materials and external content. Students in any discipline of music may want to know more about both of these subjects.

Subject Guides have a new look! Navigation should be a bit easier, especially on your smart phone or iPad.

New Database

The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music is now available online. For many years it has been the main source of scholarly information on folk and classical traditions around the world.

Find it on the Libraries’ database page: http://www.bsu.edu/library >> databases >> Music
(or use the A-Z list)

Doctor Who: 50th Anniversary

Long before the X-Files, the BBC science fiction television show, Doctor Who, featured spooky electronic music. The series premiered in 1964, when electronic music was still in its infancy. From the theremin-like, spare theme song to the orchestral grandiosity of today’s series, composers in a small studio with primitive equipment crafted a memorable soundtrack for what became a cult show.

A special 50th Anniversary edition of the soundtrack celebrates the show’s amazing music:
