

Exhibit 7.3*Interview Questions You May Be Asked

- What are your long-range career goals? Where do you hope to be in five years? In ten?
- What made you decide to pursue a graduate degree in psychology?
- How interested are you in this program?
- What training model are you most interested in? Why?
- Why did you apply to this particular program? Where did you hear about us?
- Why should we accept you into our program?
- How would you describe yourself?
- What are the most important rewards you expect in your graduate training? In your career?
- What are your greatest strengths and weaknesses?
- What two or three accomplishments in your life have given you the most satisfaction?
- How do you work under pressure? How do you handle stress?
- How likely are you to finish your degree? Why do you think you can?
- You will be required to take some rigorous courses that may not be of much interest to you. How do you feel about taking such courses?
- What major academic problem have you faced and how did you deal with it?
- What did you particularly like about your undergraduate education? What did you like least?
- What could you add to our department?
- Have you been involved in any research? If so, was your experience a positive one?
- Give me some examples of your doing more than was required in a course.
- What would you do if (several situations that might occur in graduate school)? For example, if you committed to work with a professor on some research and after two weeks found it impossible to continue, how would you handle that? Or, suppose you had already earned your master's degree and were in a practicum. If someone offered you a great deal of money to work for them full-time, would you delay pursuing your doctorate to do so?
- Is there anything additional we should know about you?
- If you don't mind telling us, what other schools have you applied to?
- Do you have any ambitions to teach?
- How do you feel about giving up a paying job for several years?
- Tell us something interesting about yourself.
- Give us some examples of your creativity, initiative, maturity, and breadth of interest.