Six multidisciplinary design teams were assembled and developed conceptual plans for six potential transit linear stations: a transit development site along the Nickel Plate Trail; a park and nature education station along the town of Noblesville; from the chartermates studios, each student in the studio continued with the programmatic components of the development strategies and designed a transit development along the Nickel Plate Trail or another potential future transit trail in Indianapolis.

These are the objectives, which guided the designs:

- Creating spatial character and identity within the neighborhood transit site
- Designing a lively public space for social discourse and animation
- Developing a pedestrian environment within a mass transit system
- Incorporating transportation modes in a seamless way by merging use technologies for resource recovery and energy production, mixed-use developments, and a non-car-based urban lifestyle.

The studio unites almost a century of combined experience in design instruction of the resident instructors (Professors Koester, Fisher and Culp) with the expertise of three of the leading lighting design professionals in the nation (John Bower of Bens Light Design/Portland; Design Gary Staffy of Gary Staffy Design; Art Angel, Phildge; and Paul Zafirou, president and principal of Lum Partners, Cambridge, Massachusetts) to provide the students with an extraordinary learning experience. “The students have come with a knowledge of lighting design that is extremely rare in architecture schools across the nation, a qualification that will serve them well in their professional careers.”

Student teams produced design for a library/recessed in downtown Muncie and familiarized themselves with the “tools of the trade” and selected design evaluation tools and instrument families in their designs using CIBSE’s custom-designed hodographs and mirror boxes artificial light and AGI’s computer-aided design software to simulate and psychophysical lighting standards on the library.

The Architecture Library

The Architecture Library offers students and faculty members 27,000 print volumes, more than 100 current periodical subscriptions and a variety of online resources. Nancy, a full-time archivist, Carol Street, and plans are underway to digitize this vital collection of Indiana archival expertise of the University Libraries, CAP and the University Libraries have reached an agreement that will serve them well in their professional careers.
